What a lovely private mountainside parcel and a nice chunky 60 acre piece of land.

This property is ninety-five percent forested. Yes it's steep but the road leads you up up and away from it all. Uphill you will traverse to several areas where it levels off.

On the way you pass over a stream and not far beyond are several sweet potential house sites. One flattish spot good for planting your flag is in a wooded surround with a distant view of rolling pasture couched by the Andean foothills. Further up we emerge from the lower woods into a rolling open field of about 5 acres in size.

Again here another pastoral view reaches out and greets you. But even better as you turn around and face the down hillside there is an awesome span of craggy cliffs & weathered stone. An impressive green cordillera that shoots up intimidatingly high in front of you rising above the pasture & tree line closest at hand.

It's the kind of surprising view that momentarily just steals your breath away.

The road ends here only a third of the way onto the property, but there's plenty more thick green forest still left to explore.

This property could be a good group purchase for a few friends wanting somewhere tranquil, private and out of the way; where there are several house sites to choose from. Or it could be a possibility to consider doing some tourist related activities here. There is a nice clearing on the roadside that would be a good spot for a restaurant. Perhaps a complimentary rental cabin business would be a nice match.

An active inter-country transit thru the Mamuil Malal pass between Argentina and Chile is not far away. It could be a good place to capture some of the underserviced lodging & food service traffic on the way to and from Pucon and San Martin. But, whatever your ultimate goal this is a nice property worth your time and consideration.
